

Fifth generation super lithium iron phosphate battery pack G

Overview

---

What is a fifth-generation LFP battery?

CATL's newly released fifth-generation LFP cells build on the performance advantages already demonstrated by its fourth-generation products, which deliver higher energy density, longer lifespan and greater power output than the industry's mainstream second- and third-generation LFP batteries.

Why is CATL launching a fifth-generation LFP battery?

CATL has started mass production of its fifth-generation LFP batteries, boosting energy density and cycle life, while advancing ternary and sodium-ion chemistries, solid-state R&D, and recycling to maintain its global power battery market lead.

What is CATL's LFP battery?

CATL's LFP battery. CATL The next phase of CATL's battery roadmap is now underway as the company moves into mass production of its fifth-generation lithium iron phosphate (LFP) cells. The new platform represents a major leap in performance, offering higher energy density and longer cycle life compared with previous generations.

Why did CATL upgrade its LFP batteries?

Building on the gains introduced in CATL's fourth-generation LFP batteries – which already outperformed mainstream second- and third-generation models in energy density, longevity, and power output – the updated cells reinforce the company's leadership in cost-efficient, durable battery technology.
