

The catering industry uses Ethiopian folding containers for ultra-high efficiency

Overview

How is the food industry integrating eco-friendly packaging strategies?

Consequently, the food industry is integrating a spectrum of eco-friendly packaging strategies — ranging from compostable formulations to refillable configurations — to align sustainability objectives with functional demands. Innovative packaging solutions increasingly incorporate biodegradable and compostable materials.

How does food waste affect restaurants and catering businesses?

Restaurants and catering businesses generate a significant amount of food waste, including surplus ingredients, trimmings, and unsold meals. This waste arises from various stages, including food preparation, service, and leftovers from customers, leading to significant economic and environmental impacts (Ishangulyyev, Kim, & Lee, 2019).

Could edible packaging reduce the environmental footprint of food packaging?

Over time, such developments could significantly lessen the environmental footprint of food packaging. Edible packaging represents one of the most creative frontiers in sustainable design, offering a radical alternative to traditional waste.

What is the percentage of food waste in restaurants and catering sectors?

The percentage of FW in restaurants and catering sectors varies significantly depending on the region, type of establishment, and management practices. Globally, it is estimated that about 12–14% of food waste occurs in the food service sector, which includes restaurants and catering services (UNEP, 2021).
